

Reading Choices and Children

What were some of your early favorite books?

Children particularly enjoy reading when they find books that catch their interest.

Parents can be very helpful in selecting age-appropriate reading materials that will enrich the imagination and provide lasting enjoyment.

Selecting Books to Read with Children

Choosing books that are appropriate to the age and interests of a child is important. When we read with our children, we not only share information, we share a special connection with them emotionally, as well. Some suggestions to consider in choosing books include:

- Make sure the book or story you select is appropriate to the child's age level and interests.
- Let the child assist in picking out books to read that he or she finds appealing and you approve.
- Utilize lists of highly regarded children's literature (Caldecott Awards, Newberry Medal, etc.) to select popular or classic reading materials.
- Look for stories that capture the attention of children quickly and are enjoyable.
- For very young children, select books that are visually interesting and interactive.

- Pay attention to elements of the story, such as a simple plot, the setting (interesting events), the main idea, quick action, well-defined characters, vivid word pictures and lots of the three R's – repetition, rhythm and rhyme.

So, what should you pick?

A variety of sources list quality children's literature. These include the National Education Association, American Library Association and other groups. The Caldecott Medal is given each year to the author of the most distinguished American picture book for children. The Newberry Medal is given each year for a best new story in children's literature. Your local library may be a good source of information on such books.
