Bartholomay is Extension Summer Intern – Lynette Flage NDSU Extension Service Northeast District Director
Justin Bartholomay is one of three Extension summer interns for 2013. These Extension interns will be involved in work in their respective counties, as well as have opportunities to serve and learn at 4-H Camp, Extension Youth Conference, and other events as time allows.

Justin will be located in Ransom County and work closely with the staff there. He will be a senior next fall at NDSU and is majoring in Animal Science with minors in Extension Education and Agribusiness. Justin is originally from Sheldon, North Dakota, and served as the 2011-2012 North Dakota Beef Ambassador. The Ambassador position allowed him to work with hundreds of youth, teaching them about the beef community.

The goals of the Extension intern program are for the interns to gain a better understanding of NDSU Extension, to recognize the skills necessary for an Extension professional, and to experience the daily activities in a county setting.

Justin can be reached at Justin.d.bartholomay@my.ndsu.edu. He will start work in Ransom County on May 13.

The program highlights many different aspects of agriculture from meat cookery to the importance that producers place on meeting high product quality standards. University faculty, staff, graduate students, undergraduates, and Extension professionals teach the program. The knowledge obtained includes; cooking techniques, food safety, industry news/updates, nutrition, meat selection, and much more. It is important that Extension Services and Land Grant Universities continue to highlight the importance of agriculture to citizens. Doing so will help produce a diverse group of agriculture champions who are well armed with knowledgeable information about agriculture.
